Historic Significance Statement

The West Point Historic District is already recognized and listed on the National Register of Historic places as of May 11, 2011. It was placed on the Registry for significant reasons in the categories of Architecture and Community Planning. There are 92 distinct resources within the proposed district boundaries, most of which are dated from 1841 - 1960. The proposed local district boundaries closely follow the district boundaries as recently approved by the Georgia National Register Review Board and the National Registry approved map. See attached Map.

Area Summary

The City of West Point is located on both sides of the Chattahoochee River on the western edge of Troup and Harris counties, Georgia. It is 16 miles southwest of LaGrange, the county seat of Troup County. The Westside Historic District lies to the north of the downtown commercial area, which is on the west side of the river. Immediately to the west of the district are the Alabama state line and the town of Lanett. The district is characterized by mostly residential buildings set on the hilly topography of the bluff that rises above the west side of the Chattahoochee River. The streets continue the gridiron pattern of downtown, but the angle shifts to the west where the river bends. The area developed organically over time as the city grew northward. South of West 13th Street, the lots tend to be irregular in size and arrangement. However there are several uniform blocks north of 13th Street that include an organized 1920s subdivision called LaRoza Heights. Concrete sidewalks are located intermittently throughout the Westside Historic District. The district includes representative examples of numerous house types common in Georgia from the mid-19th through the mid-20th century. These include Single Pen, Georgian Cottage, Gabled Wing Cottage, Queen Anne Cottage, Georgian House, Queen Ann House, New South Cottage, English Cottage, Extended Hall-Parlor, Bungalow, American Small House, and Ranch House types, as defined in Georgia's Living Places: Historic Houses in Their Landscaped Settings. Architectural styles include the Greek Revival, Folk Victorian, Queen Anne, Craftsman, Colonial Revival, English Vernacular Revival, and International Style. Nonresidential community landmarks include the West Point Woman's Club (c.1920), the West Point Presbyterian Church (1923), and the Love Union Church, and early-20th-century African-American church. There is one cemetery, known as the Westside Cemetery, but also as the Fort Tyler Cemetery or the Murrell-Cobb Cemetery, that includes burials from as early as 1841.

Period of Significance:

The period of significance for the Westside Historic District begins c.1841 with the first known burials in the Westside Cemetery. It ends at the historic period in 1961 when most of the land had been developed, and few new buildings were being constructed.

Statement of Significance Summary

The Westside Historic District is significant at the local level under for its importance to the city of West Point as one of its earliest residential areas, with its beginnings in the mid-19th century. It is significant in the area of architecture for its good collection of buildings (mostly residential) dating from the mid-19th through the early 20th century, which represents the large variety of types and styles constructed in Georgia during this time period. It also has several high-style examples designed by regionally and locally important architects such as Charles Choate, Richard Kennon Perry, and Henry Toombs. The district is significant in the area of community planning and development as an example of the growth over time of a strategically located, middle and upper class residential area. It includes early sections that evolved organically and a later section that was planned and laid out by a consortium of local prominent families. The city of West Point developed as a railroad hub, beginning in the 1850s with the completion of lines to Montgomery and Atlanta. The last quarter of the 19th century brought prosperity from textile mills along the Chattahoochee River, along with increased rail and river traffic. West Point served as a commercial, administrative, and cultural hub for the Chattahoochee Valley region, even though most of the mills and their associated mill villages were located south of West Point on the Alabama side of the river. Several of the most elaborate houses in the Westside Historic District were built by persons associated with the mills. The Chattahoochee River had a significant impact on the Westside neighborhood. The district is located north of 10th Street on a bluff. Periodic flooding caused residents to move out of the immediate downtown area and up to the relative safety of this higher ground to the north.

The Westside Historic District is significant in the area of architecture for its good intact collection of historic residential types and styles, as identified in Georgia's Living Places: Historic Houses in Their Landscaped Settings, a statewide context. Included are a variety of excellent examples of mid-19th to mid-20th-century house types and styles common in similar neighborhoods. The district also has a few good examples of 20th-century small-scale commercial architecture. Changes in architectural and building trends are reflected in the progression of development roughly from south to north, with some areas of irregular infill and some planned development.

Significant architectural styles represented by the residential resources within the district include Greek Revival, Queen Anne, Folk Victorian, Neoclassical Revival, Colonial Revival, English Vernacular Revival, Craftsman, and International Style. House types found within the district include the Single Pen, Central Hallway, Georgian Cottage, New South Cottage, Pyramid Cottage, Gabled Wing (or Gabled Ell) Cottage, Extended Hall-Parlor, Queen Anne House, Georgian House, American Foursquare, English Cottage, Bungalow, American Small House, and Ranch House.
